Work Health and Safety legislation requires a Persons Conducting a Business or Undertaking (PCBU) to take all reasonably practicable steps to ensure the safety and well-being of its workers. Similarly, the legislation requires workers to take reasonable care of themselves and others in the workplace. This shared responsibility in achieving safe workplaces is partially achieved by providing workers with information, instruction and training.

What is emergency preparedness testing?

Unfortunately, many workers struggle to cope when placed under the pressure of a serious workplace incident. This can be slightly embarrassing in a controlled situation but can be very serious when being scrutinised by the regulator, the media and insurance companies. Emergency preparedness testing creates a real-life scenario in a controlled environment that helps identify those elements of an emergency response that are effective, in those areas that need improvement.

Why test?

Testing the emergency preparedness of the organisation gives staff an opportunity to practice procedures first-hand, and thereby improving their knowledge and confidence if the situation were to actually occur.

From a business perspective, testing is an important and tangible exercise in-part demonstrating compliance with health and safety legislation and due diligence obligations.

In testing the organisation's response to an emergency that is relevant to the business provides good evidence for use during audits and evaluations of the health and safety management system.

How we test

- ✓ Consult with you to select a relevant scenario
- ✓ Review your internal emergency procedures
- ✓ Carry out a realistic on-site exercise
- ✓ Evaluate on-site emergency response equipment
- ✓ Provide comment and guidance to participants
- ✓ Provide a written report detailing how the organisation responded to the scenario and recommendations for improvement
